News of the Resorts

WASHINGTON, D. C., SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 27, 1916.

MISS HELEN BERKLEY Of Norfolk, Va.

Mrs. Baker and their three children, Mrs. Baker's young brother and two house guests, united with the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Daniels, several of their young sons and Mrs. Daniels' mother and sisters in forming the round table party in the shade.

MRS. Sam DICK

HILE days grow fewer for statesmen at the Capitol and their families live in trunks and breathless hopes of an early departure, life at summer resorts is taking on its last brilliant hues and making its last wild dash for entertainment, and here and there and every where all interest centers in the election. Before the end of another seven days the Presi dent and Mrs. Wilson will be speeding along to the Jersey coast for the formal notification and the country will be set ringing with the nominee's speech. One will almost feel for the time that nothing can deter the democratic candidate from re-election.

But at the same time Mr. Charles E. Hughes will be speeding just as rapidly toward Beverly, Mass., for a visit to Mr. Justice Oliver Wendelt Holmes at his historic mansion, and while the President and Mrs. Wilson are returning from Kentucky, where they go for the acceptance in the name of the government of the Lincoln birthplace, Mr. Hughes will still have the plaudits of his Beverly speech ringing in his ears and be preparing to move on to Portland for another hearing.

And in the meantime, politically speaking, the nation faces the case of the Lady or the Tiger. A delightful undercurrent of hospitality which is not to be dubbed social activity, but which is perhaps far more attractive, permeates that part of officialdom still held here by the machinery of the government, and just when the ebb tide is reached, and as the children say in the swing game, the cat is about to die, some dignitary arrives from afar to start a new ripple in the atmosphere.

One week' it was a distinguished foreigner, who brought new life to affairs, and last week two of our own emisMrs. Baker and their three children, who recommended the saker's young britter and their three children, who some dignitary arrives from afar to office the saker's young britter and their of the passage of the Philippine bill.

tary Redfield and Secretary Wilson all in the first of the chief executive and the "first cabinet and their wives, were much more frequent.

That the hand of Secretary Daniels led Secretary Baker into the cabinet charming family dinner party under the trees at In the Woods some days ago, when the Secretary of War and Mrs. Baker and their three children, Mrs. Baker and their three children, Mrs. Baker and their three children.

eigner, who brough new lite to aniaris, and last week two of our own emis-saries to foreign countries, Mr. Page, ambassador at London, and Mr. Sharp, ambassador to France, lent particular interest, being fresh from the warring countries of Europe, to the almost in-countries of Europe, to the almost informal dinner parties given in their honor.

One evening they, with a few other guests, dined with the French ambassador and Mme. Jusserand, who since the war have limited their dinner companies to about ten, and at another time they dined with the Secretary of State and Mrs. Lansing, being entertained at different times and with the same marked simplicity.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh C. Wallis, who claimed Ambassador Page as their guest during his stay in Washington, asked a company in to dine with them, and Senator Pomerne called together a number of his colleagues in the Senate to dine with Mr. Sharp, who was a representative in Congress from Ohio when appointed to his post in France. Members from that state were to he guests at the latter dinner, but scarcely any of them were in town at that time. Members of the cabinet were present on each occasion.

Seldom has a month of August held at the latter dinner, but scarcely any of them were in town at that time. Members of the cabinet were present on each occasion.

Seldom has a month of August held so much of national concern, and certainly not so much personal interest as has this month. The President and Mrs. Wilson set the pace for the simple life, attempting nothing social above the calling in of a few friends or members of the family for luncheon or dinner, a trip once a week to a local theater, drives through the parks or simply strolls over the south front lawn with its undulating walks and charming outlooks.

Mrs. Wilson continues to be at home dach Monday to any of the cabinet women who are in town, and they spend the entire morning in friendly conversation, their merry laughter often telling of some good joke handed along as they ply the needle or eimply sit and chat. Seldom has a President's wife and the wives of cabinet members been on such friendly terms and in such close touch as in this administration.
